Learn Guitar - 7 Quick Tips For Learning Guitar

By Dave Long

1. You do not need to learn every chord.

Some people will tell you to try and learn a new chord a day. This is nonsense. The easiest way to remember something is to use it. Pick a relatively easy song and learn the chords and changes you need to play it. This is far quicker, more fun, more rewarding and more efficient way of learning guitar.

2. The easiest guitar riffs to start learning are bass string riffs.

There are loads of great examples of these - 'Day Tripper', 'Blister in the sun', 'here comes your man', 'come as you are' etc. One huge advantage of learning these riffs is that you can use them to get your Low E string in tune - if the riff does not sound right, the string is probably not in tune.

3. When you are playing a song and you make mistakes pretend like nothing happened.

When I first started playing guitar in front of people I used to get so flustered if I made a mistake that I ended up messing up the whole tune. I quickly learned if you ignore your mistakes and keep playing the listener will not notice most of the time.

4. Learn to play on a decent steel string acoustic guitar.

I first started playing on a nylon string guitar and playing with a pick just sounded wrong. I graduated to a really rubbish steel string guitar with a neck so warped the strings at the fifth fret were half an inch from the fret board.

Until I managed to find myself a decent guitar practice was a frustrating experience and felt too much like work. Oh, and unless you are firmly set on only ever playing electric guitar I would really advise against starting on one. Moving from playing electric to acoustic guitar is twice as hard as moving the opposite way because of the fret spacing and string gauges.

5. Learn some of the more common alternate tunings.

A lot of popular songs written in alternative tunings can be quite difficult, if not impossible, to play from standard tuning. The finest example of this is 'Honky Tonk Women' by The Rolling Stones, which has baffled many a guitarist until they figure out it is not in standard tuning. Probably the easiest alternative tuning to begin with is Drop D tuning.

6. Practicing is important but you must have a reason for learning new techniques.

Knowing your goal is half the battle. Learning something like harmonics can seem pointless, or, at best mildly diverting unless you have a song in mind that requires you to know how to play them. If you do not have a reason for learning a technique you will quickly lose interest or get frustrated if things do not work as quickly as planned.

7. Try and get some basic knowledge of music theory.

Reading music notation is very useful (unless you are Paul McCartney, who famously does not read music). Having some kind of knowledge of how chords are formed and what exactly scales are can be very helpful. It's not that hard. There are only seven letters.

For example, sometimes you will find tabs on the internet which are physically impossible to play. This is especially true for 'guitar pro' tabs. If you have a good knowledge of the fret board you can manipulate the tab and make it a lot easier to play.

Guitar Learning made Easy

By Gary Sorbie

So you have finally decided to learn guitar. You have come to the right place. I will be offering advice and give reviews on good places where you can get guitar lessons. Learning guitar can be fun and easy. You can even learn how to play guitar right in the comfort of your own home. There are so many different programs that help you learn guitar. One very good site you can check out.

Some people learn how to play guitar on their own, however the majority of people are not able to learn guitar on their own without any help. At the top of this site I have posted a link that will take you step by step in learning the guitar. I have found many of my students say the guitar lessons really excelled them in their ability to learn guitar.

In the beginning it is good to have patience. Start out learning a few chords and then practice them. Whether you want to play country or rock knowing simple chords is the key to getting started.

Once you have mastered a few chords keep learning more and more. Then you can begin to use variations of these chords to play songs you know or write new ones. This is some of the steps in learning how to play guitar.

I have had my students try different course programs that help them to learn guitar. One good thing about the courses you can take from home is that you decide when you want to take your guitar lessons. You can also decide how many times you want to repeat a guitar lesson.

This gives you flexibility and now time is on your side and learning guitar fits into any schedule. Most of my new students learn guitar basics and are already playing songs by the end of a weekend. Learning guitar is always easier than the person thinks. People of all ages can achieve many different levels when they decide to learn how to play guitar.

You can learn electric and acoustic guitar with this course. I am will reviewing another course for those people who really want to get the most out of their guitar lessons. For now I have found at least one very good course. So remember you can learn guitar and knowing how to play guitar is easy. Just work on those guitar lessons a few times a week to improve on your skill
